

APPLICATION OF PRINCIPAL RESIDENCE EXCLUSION

CURRENTLY OR FORMERLY USED AS INVESTMENT PROPERTY

Internal Revenue Code ("IRC") §121 allows taxpayers selling a principal residence to exclude $250,000 of gain from taxation (or, $500,000 for married taxpayers, filing jointly) as long as they have lived in the residence for 2 out of the preceding 5 years.

However, taxpayers who sell a principal residence formerly used as an investment property are entitled to only a portion of the §121 exclusion.

Summary of Rules

1. Taxpayers who sell a principal residence used only as a principal residence. §121 provides for a $250,000/$500,000 exclusion as long as they have used the property as their principal residence for 2 of the preceding 5 years.

2. Taxpayers who sell a principal residence, originally acquired as an investment property. Pursuant to the Housing Assistance Tax Act of 2008, these taxpayers are entitled to only a portion of the §121 exclusion. They must use the formula described below:

Formula: The period of non-qualified use (period not used as a principal residence) must be divided by the total years of ownership to determine the amount of gain that is not eligible for exclusion under §121. e.g. aggregate period of "non-qualified" use = percentage of gain not eligible total period of ownership from exclusion from taxation

Non-qualified use prior to 1/1/2009 is disregarded for purposes of the above calculation. Also, the §121 exclusion does not apply to gain attributable to depreciation. Additionally, to be entitled to any §121 exclusion, they must have owned the property for a total of five years and of those five years, must have used it as a principal residence for two years (See IRC §121(d), as amended by § 840 of the American Jobs Creation Act of 2004).

Example: Taxpayer acquires an investment property, rents it for 3 years and then occupies it for 5 years as his principal residence (no use prior to 2009) before selling it and realizing $350,000 of gain of which $40,000 is from depreciation deductions. $40,000 of gain is depreciation and is excluded from the calculation. The remaining $310,000 is subject to the prorata calculation as follows:

$$\begin{aligned} &3 \text{ (years of non-qualified use)} = \\ &3/8 \text{ (37.5\%)} \times $310,000 = $116,250 \\ &8 \text{ (years' total ownership)} \end{aligned}$$

Thus $116,250 is not eligible for exclusion and is taxed at the applicable capital gains rate. $40,000 of gain is from depreciation and is taxed at the applicable recapture rate. The remaining gain of $193,750 may be excluded from taxation under §121.

3. Taxpayers who sell investment property, formerly used as a residence. Pursuant to Rev. Proc. 2005-14, they can exclude $250,000/$500,000 as long as they have used the property for their principal residence for 2 of the preceding 5 years. However, the § 121 exclusion does not apply to gain attributable to depreciation deductions for periods after May 6, 1997.

Taxpayers selling a principal residence which was formerly used as an investment/rental property or those that are selling an investment/rental property formerly used as a principal residence should consult with their tax or legal advisors regarding the application of §121 and/or §1031 to their particular situation.

To learn more, please contact

Old Republic Exchange

800.738.1031

oldrepublicexchange.com

02/2025 | Old Republic Exchange | As a Qualified Intermediary, Old Republic Exchange, its officers and employees do not provide, and this communication is not intended to be, tax or legal advice. Old Republic Exchange makes no representations or warranties regarding the tax consequences of your transaction. You should consult a tax or legal professional of your choosing to advise you of the benefits and risks of your specific transaction. The 1031 exchange process described in this communication is for illustrative purposes only, is not intended to be exhaustive, and may vary depending on the complexity of the transaction.

OLD REPUBLIC INSURANCE GROUP